MOW PASTURES IN AUGUST

If late summer and fall weeds are a problem in your pastures, clip them in August.

Agronomists at VPI say that the exact time to mow will depend on the weeds present in the pasture. The important thing is to mow before the weeds go to seed.

Chick Chats

An excellent time to cull flocks is when pullets are being moved from the range to the laying house. Keep only those pullets that have good laying qualities. It doesn't pay to feed hens that won't lay.

In choosing future layers, keep in mind these points: head type, eye, body size and conformation, general health, uniformity, early maturity and, if hatching eggs are to be produced, breed disqualifications.

Birds selected for the laying flock should display neither a crow-type nor beefy head. Pullets with clear-cut, rugged, alert heads that are fine in quality are likely to be the best layers.

Pullets just coming into production will exhibit a full, red, waxy comb and wattles. The face may tend to have a fat appearance which will disappear as the bird lays more. A prominent, keen, sparkling eye is judged to indicate a good physical condition.

Body Capacity

Body capacity is a breed characteristic that is influenced by the proper selection of breeding stock. In order to produce efficiently for a long period, the layer must have the capacity to utilize large amounts of feed. A large body provides ample room for the housing and functioning of vital organs.

Other ways of measuring capacity are: the distance between the pubic bones on either side of the vent, the distance from these bones to the tip of the keel bone, the distance between the ribs and the width and length of the back. The first two of these are most commonly used ..for example a 3-finger spread between the pubic bones indicates a good layer as does a 4-finger distance between the public bones and the keel bone.

Good Health

Select birds that exhibit good health for the pullet flock. Select birds that are uniform in size and if the flock is to produce hatching eggs, eliminate birds with crooked toes, off-colored feathers, side sprigs and other undesirable physical characteristics.

Sexual maturity is considered to be the age at which the pullet lays her first egg. Early sexual maturity is related to the number of eggs a pullet will lay in her first year. This is important to the flock owner.

MILK PRODUCTION AT RECORD LEVEL IN U. S.

Dairymen in the United States set a milk production record of 121 billion pounds last year, and it looks as though they will set another this year, VPI economists say.

There was a sharp reduction in production from May to June because of the drouth, but this is not likely to cut overall production.

WHAT THE BREADWINNER EATS

The man of the family generally has been considered one of the best-fed members. True though this may be of the farmer, a recent survey by the New Jersey Experiment Sation of 600 men working in industrial plants shows that many are not getting their daily three square meals, but are overdoing sweet snacks between meals. The two-year study was made by a team of nutritionists, biochemists, physicians and technicians and included records of food eaten as well as analyses of blood samples and medical examinations.

The results show that if the breadwinner is to keep healthy and on the job, ways must be found to give him his three well-balanced meals a day, says Dr. MacLean J. Babcock, in charge of the study. He adds that substituting snacks, offering little except calories, for balanced meals usually means that a man gets too few of the nutrients required for a good day's work.

A fourth of the men were low in calcium, needed for sound bones and teeth and proper functioning of muscles and nerves. Because an important food for calcium is milk, a pint of milk a day or its equivalent in milk products has been recommended for an adult man. Yet 30 per cent of these industrial workers drank less than half a pint of milk a day.

Blood analyses showed that one fourth of the men were low in vitamin C, correspeonding to records showing that they ate few citrus fruits, tomatoes or leafy-green vegetables.

Forty-four per cent of the men were overweight.Food records revealed that many had only a cup of coffee and a sweet roll for breakfast and then eased mid-morning hunger with high calorie snacks sold at the plant. This kind of eating not only leads to obesity but causes a lack of appetite for foods rich in minerals and vitamins. The records and medical examinations revealed not only a shortage of calcium and vitamin C but also other vitamins, particularly the important B-vitamins, thiamin and riboflavin. —Exchange.

ELLEN WHITEHEAD TO BE QUEEN AT JOUSTING TOURNAMENT

Natural Chimneys 133rd annual Jousting Tournament will be graced by a true "Ladie Faire" in the person of Miss Ellen Whitehead, of Chatham, Virginia. She may justly be described as beautiful and possessing a natural unspoiled charm even though she has many times been a winner in beauty contests.

Less than a month ago the state of Virginia proudly presented her as its contestant for the title of Miss Universe in California. While not a winner, this time Ellen made the Old Dominion proud of one of her beautiful daughters. In fact she was runner-up in this world-wide contest where competition was keen. It was simply because of a birth date. It just happened that Ellen is only seventeen and entrants were supposed to be eighteen.

Who knows—given another year to grow even more beautiful and charming, Ellen may be looking for other worlds to conquer.

Miss Whitehead's background is just good old average American heritage. Her father, S. Leslie Whitehead, operates a department store in Chatham, with Ellen's able assistance. She punches a clock regularly and tells you proudly, "I get off from work at 5:30 and you can call me after that time." The other members of her family are her mother, an older sister, Ann, whose "hand me downs" Ellen has many times blossomed out in, and a younger brother, Sammy, who loves to tease her. To say the least, they are all very proud of their beautiful girl but try hard not to show it.

The Natural Chimneys Jousting Tournament has seen many beautiful queens in the 133 years of its history. Don't tell the others . . . but the mirror on the wall will likelky say, "Ellen, fairest of them all."

EGG PRICES EXPECTED LOWER THAN 1953

Record egg production expected during the rest of the year likely will hold prices considerably below 1953.

Poultry marketing specialists at VPI say the greatest percentage gain in output over 1953 probably will occur in August or September.

The springtime lows of egg prices came relatively late this year. A relatively slow seasonal increase in production from December to the beginning of January was partly responsible. During February production rose sharply. Prices broke and then declined slowly at most levels of trade until late June. Since then prices of large eggs have risen slightly.

SAVE MANPOWER ON FARMS

A half pint of gasoline or one kilowatt-hour of electricity represents more energy than a man will produce in a hard day of work.

VPI specialists suggest using this low-cost energy to save as much labor as possible. That means using a tractor, or electric motor, wherever possible around the farm. Work done will not only be easier, but in the long run will be done more cheaply than if done by hand or "manpower."
